Introduction

There are an estimated 210,600 Illinoisans with Alzheimer’s disease (AD). Seven out of 10 persons with AD live at home with family or friends who provide 75 percent of their care.

Families struggle to keep the person with AD at home as long as possible but, for many, the lack of knowledge about community-based services may result in premature nursing home placement.

Families face difficult physical, emotional and financial burdens while providing care during the prolonged duration of the disease.

The information provided in this booklet may provide assistance in locating services and resources in your community.

Alzheimer’s Disease Assistance Centers

There is help for individuals and families when Alzheimer’s disease is suspected.

Some of the symptoms or early warning signs of AD may include the following:

- memory loss or unexplained confusion affecting job or home skills
- difficulty in performing familiar tasks and chores
- forgetting words or substituting inappropriate words
- disorientation to time and place (e.g., getting lost in familiar surroundings)
- poor or decreased judgment (e.g., wearing a winter coat on a hot summer day)
- problems with abstract thinking (e.g., difficulty balancing a checkbook)
- misplacing things in inappropriate places (e.g., putting the iron in the freezer)
- changes in mood or behavior (e.g., rapid mood swings for no apparent reason or cursing)
- drastic changes in personality (e.g., suspiciousness)
- lack of interest and involvement in usual activities
If several of these symptoms or warning signs are present, the person should be evaluated by a physician. Frequently, the early symptoms of AD, which include forgetfulness and loss of concentration, are mistakenly dismissed as normal signs of aging.

It is important to determine the actual cause of the cognitive (mental process including memory and judgment) symptoms. The symptoms may not be caused by AD. Many causes, such as depression, drug interaction, thyroid problems and vitamin deficiencies, are reversible if detected early and treated appropriately. An early diagnosis of AD can increase the chance of potential benefits from approved medications. It also allows the person with AD to participate in health care, financial and legal decisions.
